(Continued from First Page.) Call at thority bound in silver is modeled after the gavel of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and made by the person usually employed by the government for this purpose.

It is presented by Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Gurley, children of the first pastor of this church, and thus the name of Dr. Phineas T. Gurley, the moderator of the general assembly of 1867, is brought into association with the general assembly of 1893, a man eminent and useful in his day and the pastor and friend of Abraham WHAT IT REPRESENTS.

Now, Mr. Moderator, the gavel seems to be Now, Mr. Moderator, the gavel seems to be an instrument more of construction than destruction, an instrument of peace, rather than destruction, an instrument of peace, rather than destruction, an instrument of peace, rather than a weapon of war; a tool, not an arm; suggestive in its intellectual and spiritual control of the building of that temple not made with hands, but with moral decisions, of which the Holy Ghost is the tenant. It is at once a harmonious and the most profitable general assembly of the one hundred and fifth, and. like Aaron's rod, bud with blessing and prophecy.

In accepting the gavel the moderator said that he wished to take exception to one remark made by Dr. Bartlett. He had not been elected being of the moderator and he king of the assembly, but its servant, and he hoped to wield the gavel with that conception of his position. Dr. Craig spoke of the late Rev. Dr. Gurley, whom he had met in former assemblies, and expressed his appreciation of the act of Mr. and Mrs. Gurley.

THE WHITE HOUSE RECEPTION. Dr. Bartlett made again the announcements respecting the excursion to Mt. Vernon tomorrow and respecting the reception at the White House this afternoon. He said it would be time enough for the White House reception if the assembly adjourned at 4 o'clock. All the if the assembly adjourned at 4 o'clock. All the commissioners, he said, were invited, also the ladies here on missionary errands.

A COMMITTEE AT WORK. account of the efforts made to secure a conference on a proper basis with representatives to the work of evangelization among freed-men. The difficulty of the case had been that the committee had not had the power required to fully represent the assembly, and hence had not had a meeting with the commit-ice of the southern conference. It asked that the committee be continued, with the addition of Rev. Dr. W. C. Young and with the necessary powers. In addition, the committee re-commended that the southern assembly at Macon be invited to appoint a similar committee. The report was adopted. Theological Seminaries.

Rev. Dr. W. C. Young, chairman of the committee on theological seminaries, presented the report of his committee. The report said: The subject assigned to the committee for

The morning mail.

There are fourteen theological seminaries and schools which make annual report to the general assembly, and which are more or less in connection with and related to the Presbyterian Church. In the order in which they are found in the minutes of 1892 these seminaries and schools are as follows: Princeton, Auburn, Western, Lane, Union, Danville, McCormick, Blackburn, San Francisco, Dubuque, Newark, Lincoln, Biddle and Omaha. Lincoln, Biddle and Omaha.

The first theological seminary established by the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America was located at Princeton, New Jersey. The first property contributed for the purpose of maintaining a theological seminary of the Presbyterian Church was given to the general assembly, and was held and owned by it, and atthe time the seminary was founded, but one seminary was contemplated by the church.

At the time of the formation of the first the ological seminary of the Presbyterian Church it was the purpose of the church to maintain direct and complete control by its general assembly of the teaching and property of its theological seminaries.

The creation of this civil corporation to take title to add on the control of the princeton.

The creation of this civil corporation to take title to and own the property of the Princeton Seminary was the first radical departure from the original purpose and plan in the creation and operation of theological seminaries by the church. The civil corporation became the owner in trust of all property given to it after its formation, and of all property given to the seminary before that time, and the beneficial use of such property as is still held by the trustees of the general assembly for the seminary.

The difference between the ownership and control by the general assembly, by its board of trustees, of the property and finances of a seminary and the ownership and control of James M. Creighton, the property and finances by an independent civil corporation is radical and far reaching.

Control of the finances and property of a seminary may be made practical, effective control of the teaching and all matters connected with the seminary.

INFORMATION. Where the assembly has the legal right by the terms of the charter to elect and remove the trustees and direct the management and disposition of all funds it is able to enforce its mandates. This power it possessed over the property given for Princeton until 1822, when the independent civil corporation was created to which was given the property, with the limitations as heretofore stated.

THE PRINCETON PLAN.

As the church grew in numbers, with the growth of the country, other seminaries and schools were formed, some of them on substantially the same plan as that of Princeton.
This plan provides a board of directors, not incorporated, for the appointment of professors, the control of the instruction and the general management of the seminary, the mem-bers of which board are either elected by the general assembly or the assembly possesses the power of vetoing their election, reserving to it-self the power to alter, amend or change the plan of government The ownership and man-agement of the property is vested in a board of trustees of the civil corporations, which are in-corporated to take title to and hold the prop-erty for the use of the same. The seminaries organized substantially under this plan were Princeton, Western, McCormick, Danville and Other seminaries, organized under different plans, have become connected with the church, either by contract relations, or through its synods and presbyteries, or through the action of their boards in seeking the indorsement of the church, in order to obtain funds and stu-OTHER CLASSES.

Union and Lane are typical of two classes Auburn and San Francisco of other classes. Union is a civil corporation whose charter is undenominational and makes no reference of any kind to the Presbyterian Church. No con-trol of the seminary, either in its teaching of property, is, by the terms of its charter, given to the church in any of its agencies. In the case of Lane, the only reference to the church, in the charter, is in Art. 3, which provides that a majority of the executive committee and all of its professors and instructors shall be members of the Presbyterian Church in good standing. While these seminaries (Union and Lane) have been regarded as in connection with the Presbyterian Church and have heretofore been operated in the interest of that denomination by the terms of the charters of the respective corporations, which have absolute control of the propety, subject

A report from the committee on conference on colored work, of which R. R. Sunderland is chairman, was read. The committee gave an chairman, was read. The committee gave an donors of funds to them no protection in the matter of applying their gifts to the purpose for which they are made. Auburn is controlled by certain presbyteries and San Francisco by certain synods, for details as to which reference is made to the appendix—pages 20 and 24. ence is made to the appendix-pages 20 and 24.

INDEPENDENT CIVIL CORPORATIONS. The charters of the independent civil corporation holding the property in trust for the poration holding the property in trust for the seminaries, differ more or less in detail, but have this common feature, that these corpora-tions own the property, and have its control and management, free from any direct inter-ference by the general assembly, save as to the property given to them by the assembly, as to which the assembly may direct the manage-ment.

The greater portion of the property held by these corporations, and which amounts to between $8,000,000 and $9,000,000, is not held in trust for the general assembly of the Presbyterian Church, nor is it given the direct control, management or disposition of the same by the terms of their charters.

How far, in the method of organizing and operating the theological seminaries,

The report said:

The subject assigned to the committee for report will, in so far as the committee has reached any results, be best presented under the following heads:

First. The present legal status of the theological seminaries, including the ownership and control of the property held in trust for them. Second. The present control possessed by the Presbyterian Church, through its gemeral assembly, synods and presbyteries, over the teaching and property of the theological seminaries.

Presbyterian Church, and which are generally known and accepted by the membership of the church as Presbyterian seminaries. The essential features of these charters for the purposes of such examination will be found in the appendix, pages 13 to 27 inclusive.
